

No Stupid Questions

Answering your questions about Unitarian Universalism

“We welcome all who welcome all,” you might hear us say to communicate the values that hold our widening circle of faith.

As Unitarian Universalists, we are rooted in a liberal religious lineage—a long history of liberal Christians doing this work of widening the circle of faith by valuing our lived experience as sacred text, by uplifting science and reason as faithful sources of truth, and by choosing Love—over and over again.

The worship series for July 7 through August 11 is No Stupid Questions. For the next six weeks, our worship will unpack some of the history and theology of Unitarian Universalism and explore the Sources of our Living Tradition, including science, poetry, scripture, and personal experience.

But what is your question? What do you want to know about Unitarian Universalism? The very last Sunday in our series—August 11th—is our “Question Box” Sunday. Sean and Kristen will be randomly pulling questions out of a box that you submit at the beginning of the service. What questions do you have about Unitarian Universalism?

Truly, there are no stupid questions.
